25X1 [REDACTED] Comment. The rumor was not acknowledged in the Korean press or radio until the morning of 9 July, when the ROK government issued a denial of the report in the press. The rumor was apparently officially inspired, since President RHEE exerts a tight control of the students through the teachers. Prior to the ROK's official denial, the rumor appeared possibly to be a significant attempt to induce the attitude of desperation and fatalism in the Korean people, who would then be receptive to desperate acts. The date of the impending crisis tied in with reports of a possible ROK Army attack in mid-August.
